Dear Terry and Mark,

Just read MCP #126! Some thoughts:

"Passion Play" continues to be the main event—a showcase for interesting but little-seen heroes (namely Le Peregrine and Black Widow). The variety of parties interested in Lynx makes for a very volatile and unpredictable situation. The art is pretty decent too! One complaint—where did Wolvie, Courier and Le Peregrine scrounge up three plastic "Flesh Tone" suits on short notice? Is there an extremely talented tailor in Champion's compound? Oh well... A-.

The She-Hulk story wrapped up nicely, with Adrian showing some nobility and responsibility. Her act of saving She-Hulk cast a tragic light on her life. However, I considered it something of a cop-out to have She-Hulk in a rage about Adrenazon's "death," only to find out on the next page that she was alive. I don't know; the ending seemed too rushed and sloppy. Sorry, C+.

"The Walking Wounded" Part 5—oh man, how chilling. No wonder so many of my friends are absolutely crazy about Ann Nocenti's writing! Personally, I haven't read enough of it to be a fanatic, but what I have seen has been consistently powerful and thought provoking. Some aspects of the story have been a little too cryptic for my tastes, though, and the rather avant-garde coloring is sometimes too murky and unclear. The next chapter looks promising, though! B+.

And finally, the Iron Fist story seems to be a nice set-up for the upcoming monthly series by J.M. DeMatteis and Jae Lee. Unfortunately, and I'll be brutally honest with you here, I can't get past the art to enjoy it. The art style is too reminiscent of Rob Liefeld's heavily crosshatched style, which I simply don't like. Sorry, but I just don't go for this hot, trendy stuff; it looks sloppy to me. C-.

Well, thanks for listening, and I'll catch you next time.

Thanks for writing, Scott. We always appreciate your comments. As for our heroes getting those "Flesh Tone" suits in "Passion Play," you were not far from the truth in your guess. Actually, it's Wolverine that's an expert tailor.—especially with plastics... ah, but that's just another facet of Wolvie's mysterious past...

Dear Marveloids,

I picked up a copy of MARVEL COMICS PRESENTS #126 today and I was impressed. I collected MCP up until issue #95, when I became dissatisfied with the book's quality. However, this fresh look at the new MCP has brought me back to the comic.

I've always been a big fan of Typhoid Mary, ever since I first saw her in DAREDEVIL. It was nice to see this character again, especially under such excellent artistic management as Nocenti, Lightle and Lopez provide.

Actually, congratulations are in order for all of the writers (Lobdell, Corvese, Cavalieri and Nocenti, in #126. They all did a good job explaining the storylines, so it was easy for me to follow what was going on. Not bad, considering that I've missed thirty-odd issues.

MCP #126 was good enough to bring me back for more next issue. Oh yeah... an extra pat on the back to Joey Cavalieri for using the word "flubber" in a sentence.

Thanks for coming back, Jason, we missed you. And, if you promise to stay around, we'll promise to increase the usage of the word "flubber" in future stories!

Dear Terry and Mark,

MARVEL COMICS PRESENTS #126 was another good issue. Here's what I thought of it, and why:

Wolverine Cover: This was another enjoyable cover from Fry and Ivy, and was more than a bit on the wacky side, which is why I liked it. Grade: A+.

Ghost Rider/Typhoid Mary Cover: Steve Lightle did a good job drawing G.R. and Mary, adding some great detail to his work. Did he color it, as well? Grade: A+.

"Passion Play" Part 4: Is this story six or eight chapters long? I hope you're not planning on cutting this great story short, considering we haven't seen much of the Lynx. I have to congratulate Scott on assembling a worldwide collection of heroes. We've got Wolvie (Canada), Courier (Germany), Le Peregrine (France) and the Black Widow (Russia). Not only that, but they argue as much as the real United Nations! Grade: A.

"Adrenazon's Revenge" Part 4: This was my favorite offering this issue, containing a touching story by Kelly Corvese, as well as some stunning artwork by Hoover and Campanella. In fact, the whole story has been very good. Grade: A+.

"Book of Changes" Part 2: Whereas Dave Hoover's artwork flowed across the pages in the She-Hulk story, here his work seemed stiff. It seems that Campanella looks better over him than Albrecht does here. I mean no offense to Jeff. It's just that some pencilers and inkers do not go well together. Also, storywise, Iron Fist's extreme distrust of Misty seemed extremely out of character for him. Grade: B.

"Walking Wounded" Part 4: This story has improved greatly since last issue, clarifying many points that I was confused about before. I'm glad Steve is back inking his work again; it seems much better now. Grade: A.

Overall Grade: A. Good work, guys, and thanks for giving us the She-Hulk solo story. Female characters rarely get the spotlight in comics, and MCP is the perfect place to have them. I'd love to see you spotlight some of the X-Ladies in the future, such as Psylocke, Rogue, Shadowcat or Storm. Thanks for your time, and I'll see you in two weeks!

Ben Herman
New Rochelle, NY

Thanks for writing, Ben. We look forward to hearing from you again, as well. Now, let's try to answer your questions: As you can now see, "Passion Play" is, in fact, eight parts, since you are holding the final issue in your hands. The Steve Lightle cover was colored by our very own George Roussos, with a little help from Steve, who sent along a guide that indicated the colors he wanted on it!

Dear Terry and Mark,

I'm just writing to tell you how much I've enjoyed the past few issues of MARVEL COMICS PRESENTS. Reading the new chapters of "Passion Play" and "The Walking Wounded" have become the highlight of my comic reading schedule.

I like these stories so much because I feel that Scott Lobdell and Ann Nocenti are two of the premier writers in comics today. While Ann seems to be slowly achieving fame as a writer, Scott seems to have exploded onto the comics scene. Why, just a few short years ago, he was writing Le Peregrine stories right here in these pages. And now, he's still writing Le Peregrine stuff, along with UNCANNY X-MEN, EXCALIBUR stories, and many other projects.

As for Ann, I am consistently entertained by her work, and hope to see more of her intelligent and compelling writing in the future.
